Attachment 5: Statement of Work and Budget

Background

Domestic violent extremism remains one of America’s largest national security threats. Since the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, hundreds of individuals have been implicated in more than 50 homegrown plots or attacks. Recent attacks, such as the Boston Marathon bombings, underscore the urgency of developing a preventative “countering violent extremism” (CVE) approach at the state and local levels.

To help counter the rise of violent extremism, in August 2011 President Obama signed the National Strategy for Empowering Local Partners to Prevent Violent Extremism in the US, which recognizes the threat of violent extremism as the “preeminent security threat to our country,” and acknowledges that “our best defenses against these threats are well informed and equipped families, local communities, and institutions.” This strategy focuses on developing community-based initiatives to identify, prevent, and neutralize threats of violent extremism. Local law enforcement agencies play a critical role in this effort, as “community-based problem solving, local partnerships, and community-oriented policing provides a basis for addressing violent extremism as part of a broader mandate of community safety.”

However, preventing acts of domestic violent extremism - regardless of their source - can present a significant challenge for law enforcement. Compared to transnational terrorism, which usually requires some level of organizational support, significant funding, and means of circumventing immigration controls and border security, domestic incidents can be planned and executed without the perpetrator leaving a large footprint. Individuals who move through the radicalization process in isolation often have little or no connection to established terrorist organizations, gain information and inspiration via the Internet, and leave few clues about their violent intentions. Additionally, many local law enforcement agencies have not received proper training when it comes to CVE outreach strategies. According to CVE experts at a June 2014 conference in Washington DC sponsored by the National Institute of Justice (NIJ):

- 62% of law enforcement agency officials said they had NO training on how to engage communities
- 80% had NOT provided their communities with training on identifying at-risk individuals/behaviors etc.

Although law enforcement plays a critical role in CVE efforts, these community-based initiatives also rely on the involvement of local partners such as faith-based groups, nonprofit organizations, local government agencies, and the general public. This proposal outlines a model for a comprehensive, community-based CVE strategy, that will address the violent extremism challenges that communities increasingly face.

In response to the President’s call for local initiatives, WORDE (the World Organization for Resource Development and Education) in partnership with the Montgomery County Police Department (MCPD) and the Montgomery County Executive’s Office of Community Partnerships has developed the country’s first community-led CVE program. This public-private partnership, widely known as the “Montgomery County Model” (MCM), facilitates effective community policing by fostering social cohesion amongst diverse county residents and creating bottom-up strategies to promote public safety and reduce violence.

The MCM has a core focus on generating public awareness about the risk factors of violent extremism and empowering the appropriate figures to intervene with vulnerable individuals before they choose a path of violence. The success of the MCM relies on a trusting relationship among local police, schools, health and human services agencies, and the faith community, whereby persons who may be at risk of violent extremism are identified and then referred for services. The MCM is implemented through the Montgomery County Executive’s Faith Community Working Group (FCWG), whose numerous programs serve as a multi-faith, multi-stakeholder platform for creating awareness of the precursors of violence.

Subrecipient Initials: BS
WORDE

The primary objective of the proposed initiative is to use the lessons learned from the MCM to develop standards, best practices, and training programs for other communities seeking to implement a robust CVE program.

Scope of Work

Subrecipient will support WORDE to accomplish the following objectives:

1. Assist in the assessment of the MCM to identify process gaps and weaknesses and to provide recommendations to address these issues; identify the interactions and satisfaction of both police department personnel and the community members to determine if changes must be implemented within the MCM before replication at a national level.

2. Assist in the development of a practitioner's guide of promising practices, lessons learned, and recommendations for how to improve policies, procedures, and resources for instituting community policing practices to counter violent extremism.

3. Assist in the development of a training module, associated instructional guidebook, and training materials, to provide agencies nationwide with the ability to replicate the MCM. The training module will be developed in a hardcopy and electronic webinar format.

In supporting the above-referenced objectives, Subrecipient shall:

1. Be responsible for acquiring the rights to copyrighted material for inclusion in U.S. Department of Justice publications or other products or deliverables that are developed under this cooperative agreement, including the payment of required fees. All licensing, publishing or similar agreements with a copyright holder, publisher or other relevant party shall include provisions giving the Federal Government a royalty-free, non-exclusive, and irrevocable license to reproduce, publish, or otherwise use, and to authorize others to use, the copyrighted material for Federal Government purposes.
