Forest Care with Fungi

@6pm-7pm @3251 West Side Pl Atlanta, GA 30316

Note: Join us in the Weelaunee Forest for a 2-day hands-on tutorial on low-tech low-cost DIY mushroom cultivation techniques using 5-gallon buckets, privet and oyster mushrooms. We will let the fungus teach us how both native and non-native plant species can provide gifts and we will let them teach us about our role in forest stewardship. The mere presence of privet in Weelaunee Forest has been used as justification by APF to engage in ecological and community destruction. We will let the fungus teach us how privet can be a life-sustaining gift rather than just simply a nuisance. Day 1 will consist of an explanation of the basic process and we will begin with the substrate pasteurization. We will meet at the gazebo for the first portion of each day and then do a short hike out to the cultivation site. Please wear close toed shoes, pants, long sleeves and gloves as we will be sharing the woods with poison ivy and mosquitos. Also, please bring your own water bottles as it will likely be hot and humid.

The techniques learned and ideas generated in the forest will be like a wind borne spore that you will carry with you to your own area of influence and spread like mycelium to create a solid mass of resistance to ecological destruction. Note: Join us in the Weelaunee Forest for a 2-day hands-on tutorial on low-tech low-cost DIY mushroom cultivation techniques using 5-gallon buckets, privet and oyster mushrooms. We will let the fungus teach us how both native and non-native plant species can provide gifts and we will let them teach us about our role in forest stewardship. The mere presence of privet in Weelaunee Forest has been used as justification by APF to engage in ecological and community destruction. We will let the fungus teach us how privet can be a life-sustaining gift rather than just simply a nuisance. Day 1 will consist of an explanation of the basic process and we will begin with the substrate pasteurization. We will meet at the gazebo for the first portion of each day and then do a short hike out to the cultivation site. Please wear close toed shoes, pants, long sleeves and gloves as we will be sharing the woods with poison ivy and mosquitos. Also, please bring your own water bottles as it will likely be hot and humid.
