

2006 WL 77695 (U.S.) (Appellate Brief)
Supreme Court of the United States.

LEAGUE OF LATIN AMERICAN CITIZENS, et al., TRAVIS COUNTY, TEXAS, et al., Eddie JACKSON, et al., GI FORUM OF TEXAS, et al., Appellants, v.

Rick PERRY, et al., Appellees.

Nos. 05-204, 05-254, 05-276, 05-439.

January 10, 2006.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas

Brief of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. as Amicus Curiae in Support of Appellants

Theodore M. Shaw
Director-Counsel

Jacqueline A. Berrien

* Norman J. Chachkin

Debo P. Adegbile

Chinh Q. Le

Jenigh J. Garrett

NAACP Legal Defense
and Educational Fund, Inc.
99 Hudson Street, 16th Floor
New York, NY 10013
(212) 965-2200
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

*i TABLE OF CONTENTS

Table of Authorities .....	ii
Interest of Amicus Curiae .....	1
Introduction and Summary of Argument .....	1
ARGUMENT -
I Districts In Which Voters Of A Particular Minority Group Do Not Constitute 50% Of The Relevant Population, But Who Are Able To Elect Candidates Of Their Choice In Combination With Other Minority Voters, Or With Reliable Crossover Votes From The Population Majority, Meet The First Gingles Precondition For A Viable Section 2 Claim .....	6
A. Recognizing “Crossover” or “Coalition” Districts under Section 2 Is Consistent with the Statutory Language, Structure and Intent, and also with This Court’s Voting Rights Act Jurisprudence .....	8
B. Section 2 Claims Involving “Coalition” or “Crossover” Districts Are Governed by Manageable Standards Already Familiar to Federal Courts from Past Section 2 Litigation .....	14
II Whatever Limitations, If Any, The Court Places Upon Political Gerrymanders, It Is Essential That They, Like Other Redistrictings, Remain Subject To Meaningful Scrutiny Under Section 2 .....	17

League of Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006 WL 77695 (2006)

*ii A. The Doctrine that Racial Cleavages in Political Party Affiliation Negate the Significance Under Section 2 of Racial Voting Patterns Misconstrues this Court's Section 2 Jurisprudence .....	18
B. The Fifth Circuit's Partisanship Exception to the Second and Third Gingles Preconditions Ignores the Extent to which Race Has Become Implicated in Partisan Alignment .....	23
C. Whether or Not It Holds that There Are Constitutional Limits to Partisan Gerrymandering in the Redistricting Process, the Court Should Explicitly Disapprove the Fifth Circuit's Unique Partisanship Exception to Section 2 .....	26
Conclusion .....	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases:

Beer v. United States , 423 U.S. 130 (1976) .....	16
Brewer v. Ham , 876 F.2d 448 (5th Cir. 1989) .....	11
Bush v. Vera , 517 U.S. 952 (1996) .....	1
*iii Campos v. City of Baytown, Texas , 840 F.2d 1240 (5th Cir. 1988), cert. denied , 492 U.S. 905 (1990) .....	11
Chisom v. Roemer , 501 U.S. 380 (1991) .....	1
City of Mobile v. Bolden , 446 U.S. 55 (1980) .....	1
Concerned Citizens v. Hardee County Bd. , 906 F.2d 524 (11th Cir. 1990) .....	11
Ga. v. Ashcroft , 539 U.S. 461 (2003) .....	passim
Goosby v. Town Bd. of Hempstead , 180 F.3d 476 (2d Cir. 1999) .	23
Grove v. Emison , 507 U.S. 25 (1993) .....	7
Holder v. Hall , 512 U.S. 874 (1994) .....	15
Houston Lawyers' Ass'n v. Attorney General of Texas , 501 U.S. 419 (1991) .....	1
Jackson v. Perry , 160 L. Ed. 2d 252 (2004) .....	7n
*iv Johnson v. Cal. , 162 L. Ed. 2d 129 (2005) .....	22n
Johnson v. DeGrandy , 512 U.S. 997 (1994) .....	7, 12, 13
Ketchum v. Byrne , 740 F.2d 1398 (7th Cir. 1984) .....	10n
League of United Latin American Citizens v. Clements , 999 F.2d 831 (5th Cir. 1993), cert. denied , 510 U.S. 1071 (1994) .....	1, 20, 26
League of United Latin American Citizens v. Midland Ind. Sch. Dist. , 812 F.2d 1494 (5th Cir.), vacated and aff'd on other grounds , 829 F.2d 546 (5th Cir. 1987) .....	11
Metts v. Murphy , 363 F.3d 8 (1st Cir. 2004) .....	7
NAACP v. Button , 371 U.S. 415 (1963) .....	1
Perez v. Pasadena Ind. Sch. Dist. , 165 F.3d 368 (5th Cir. 1999), cert. denied , 528 U.S. 1114 (2000) .....	7
Reno v. Bossier Parish Sch. Bd. , 520 U.S. 471 (1997) .....	15
*v Session v. Perry , 298 F. Supp. 2d 451 (E.D. Tex. 2004) .....	6-7, 16, 17, 22
Shaw v. Hunt , 517 U.S. 899 (1996) .....	1
Thornburg v. Gingles , 478 U.S. 30 (1986) .....	passim
United States v. Hays , 515 U.S. 737 (1995) .....	1
Uno v. City of Holyoke , 72 F.3d 973 (1st Cir. 1995) .....	23
United States v. Charleston County , 365 F.3d 341 (4th Cir. 2004) .....	23
Valdespino v. Alamo Heights Ind. Sch. Dist. , 168 F.3d 848 (5th Cir. 1999), cert. denied , 528 U.S. 1114 (2000) .....	7
Vieth v. Jubilirer , 541 U.S. 267 (2004) .....	5, 21, 26n
Voinovich v. Quilter , 507 U.S. 145 (1993) .....	7, 13
White v. Regester , 412 U.S. 755 (1973) .....	14
*vi Constitution and Statutes:
U.S. Const., Art. I, Sec. 4 .....	26n
Voting Rights Act of 1965, Section 2, 42 U.S.C. § 1973(b) .....	passim

League of Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006 WL 77695 (2006)

Other Authorities:

Mike Allen, RNC Chief to Say It Was ‘Wrong’ to Exploit Racial Conflict for Votes , Washington Post, July 14, 2005 .....	24-25
Mary Frances Berry & John W. Blassingame, Long Memory; the Black Experience in America (1982) .....	25
Thomas B. Edsall & Mary D. Edsall, Chain Reaction; The Impact of Race Rights, and Taxes on American Politics (1991) .	24
Richard L. Engstrom, The Reincarnation of the Intent Standard: Federal Judges and At-Large Election Cases , 28 How. L.J. 495 (1985) .....	21
*vii Paul Frymer, Uneasy Alliances; Race and Party Competition in America (1999) .....	25
Bernard Grofman & Lisa Handley, Issues in Voting Rights , 65 Miss. L.J. 205 (1995) .....	20, 21, 23
Bernard Grofman, Lisa Handley, & David Lublin, Drawing Effective Minority Districts: A Conceptual Framework and Some Empirical Evidence , 79 N.C.L. Rev. 1383 (2001) .....	12
Samuel Issacharoff, Polarized Voting and the Political Process: The Transformation of Voting Rights Jurisprudence , 90 Mich. L. Rev. 1833 (1992) .....	11-12
Pamela S. Karlan, Loss and Redemption: Voting Rights at the Turn of a Century , 50 Vand. L. Rev. 291 (1997) .....	11
Pamela S. Karlan & Daryl J. Levinson, Why Voting Is Different , 84 Cal. L. Rev. 1201 (1996) .....	20, 21, 24
*viii Voting Rights Act: Hearings on S. 53, S. 1761, S. 1975, S. 1992 and H.R. 3112 Before the subcomm. on the Constitution of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. (1982) .....	2

*1 Interest of Amicus Curiae<sup>1</sup>

The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. (“LDF”) is a nonprofit corporation chartered by the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court as a legal aid society. The Legal Defense Fund’s first Director-Counsel was Thurgood Marshall. Since its founding in 1939, LDF has been committed to enforcing legal protections against racial discrimination and to securing the constitutional and civil rights of African Americans. See NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 422 (1963) (describing LDF as a “ ‘firm’ ... which has a corporate reputation for expertness in presenting and arguing the difficult questions of law that frequently arise in civil rights litigation”).

LDF has an extensive history of participation in efforts to eradicate barriers to the full political participation of African Americans in and to eliminate racial discrimination from the political process. LDF has represented parties or participated as amicus curiae in numerous voting rights cases before this Court and the United States Courts of Appeals. See, e.g., Ga. v. Ashcroft, 539 U.S. 461 (2003); Bush v. Vera, 517 U.S. 952 (1996); Shaw v. Hunt, 517 U.S. 899 (1996); United States v. Hays, 515 U.S. 737 (1995); League of United Latin American Citizens v. Clements, 999 F.2d 831 (5th Cir. 1993) (en banc), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1071 (1994); Chisom v. Roemer, 501 U.S. 380 (1991); Houston Lawyers' Ass'n v. Attorney General of Texas, 501 U.S. 419 (1991); and Thornburg v. Gingles, 478 U.S. 30 (1986). In addition, LDF actively supported the legislative reversal of the decision in City of Mobile v. Bolden, 446 U.S. 55 (1980), which was achieved through the 1982 *2 amendments to Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. See Voting Rights Act: Hearings on S. 53, S. 1761, S. 1975, S. 1992 and H.R. 3112 Before the Subcomm. on the Constitution of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 1251-68 (1982) (statement of Julius L. Chambers, President of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.).

League of Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006 WL 77695 (2006)

---

Because of its longstanding commitment to the elimination of racial discrimination in the political process and the protection of the voting rights of African Americans, LDF has an interest in these appeals, which present important issues concerning the interpretation and application of Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, 42 U.S.C. § 1973.

Introduction and Summary of Argument

The four post-2000 Census Texas congressional redistricting cases consolidated before this Court arise from a set of facts that is at once common and extraordinary. The underlying facts are common because they detail a redistricting story in which a partisan majority used its control of the process to extract maximum political advantage. This is unremarkable. Experience teaches that both the Democratic and Republican parties aggressively pursue their partisan motives in redistricting where they can control the process.

The story is extraordinary, however, because the naked partisan objectives of the redistricting process at issue were laid bare by the unusual timing of the line redrawing, and by the means that the proponents employed to achieve their partisan ends. A court-drawn and -approved congressional districting plan fashioned after the 2000 Census, and described as tilting in favor of the Republican party that controls Texas, was deemed not to tilt far enough in an era when computer <sup>3</sup> innovations have enhanced the possibilities for highly effective gerrymandering. Minority party Democratic legislators fled the state they were elected to serve in an effort to avoid a vote on and passage of the plan that was ultimately passed. Proponents of the “re-redistricting” plan enlisted a federal agency to aid in obtaining the return of the departed state legislators, and longstanding procedural rules of the legislature were nearly abrogated to facilitate passage of the partisan plan.

This set of underlying facts - manifesting familiar redistricting opportunism as well as extraordinary proceedings and techniques - presents this Court for the second time in as many years with the central question whether partisan distortions of the redistricting process can rise to the level of Constitutional injury.

The political aspects of the case have received considerable attention, and any rule(s) that the Court may choose to fashion in service of constitutional guarantees could provide important guidance in establishing the outer bounds to which elected officials may reach in their efforts to place their own, and their parties', interests above those contemplated by the public and Constitutional purposes of redistricting.

Because the cases consolidated before this Court arose in Texas, a state that reflects many of the prevailing demographic patterns and population trends in the United States, there is another - perhaps less discussed but no less important - set of questions that run through the jurisdictional statements. These are questions about minority voting rights and the degree to which contemporary partisan redistricting battles are at tension with well-established legal principles that protect minority citizens' access to the political process and their right to elect candidates of their choice. Not only do partisan manipulations raise questions about the limits of <sup>4</sup> legislative power exercised in defense of its own interests, but they also threaten to trample principles of minority political fairness elevated by the entire nation in the commands of the 14th and 15th Amendments, and embraced in bipartisan Congressional votes of support for the Voting Rights Act on five occasions. Through these votes, political partisans have themselves recognized that our Constitution and history demand that some rules enjoy a place of primacy in the political process.

Indeed this case raises the specter of an even greater, if less obvious, danger for minority voting rights: If this Court refrains from announcing any limitation on partisan gerrymanders regardless of their severity, and also permits partisan explanations to trump racially disparate voting behavior so as to insulate legislative enactments from judicial scrutiny, the Voting Rights Act, and the minority political fairness principles for which it stands, would become largely meaningless.

Accordingly, LDF submits this brief as amicus curiae to address two important issues of interpretation of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, as amended, and construed in the seminal Section 2 case of Thornburg v. Gingles, 478 U.S. 30 (1986). These issues, involving (a) the minority numerosity requirement (Gingles' first precondition), and (b) the legal significance of partisan alignments along racial lines in negating the significance of racially polarized voting (Gingles' third precondition), were the second of the Questions Presented in the jurisdictional statements in Nos. 05-296 and 05-204, respectively.

First, LDF urges this Court to recognize that it is consistent with the language, purposes and evolution of its own doctrine under the Voting Rights Act for minority voters to assert legally cognizable interests in opportunities to elect candidates of their *5 choice even in districts where those minorities are not sufficiently concentrated to comprise a numerical majority. However, in order for this principle to be both consistent with the statutory purposes of Section 2, and to serve the screening function for which the Gingles prerequisites were intended, it must be properly limited to recognize only reliable coalition districts that provide a discernible opportunity for the coalition to elect and not improvidently extended in the Section 2 context to encompass necessarily amorphous influence districts. If this Court agrees with our suggestion and modifies the first Gingles prerequisite, the judgment below should be vacated with instructions to reconsider the affected claims and issues in light of the new standard.

Second, if this Court reaches the issue of the interplay between partisan and racially polarized voting patterns under the Gingles preconditions, it should find that considerations of partisan polarization may not rebut, and thereby place beyond judicial reach, a prima facie showing under the Gingles preconditions but may be considered only under the totality of the circumstances.

These legal questions are of considerable moment. More than forty years after passage of the transformative Voting Rights Act, the Court is presented in these appeals with an opportunity to revisit its seminal Section 2 decision, as well as to reconcile partisan redistricting issues, recently considered in Vieth v. Jubelirer, 541 U.S. 267 (2004), that are bound up in, but not fully coextensive with, the minority political fairness principles to which Congress has consistently committed our nation. That these issues are now intertwined is no reason to abandon Constitutional and Congressional mandates. Indeed, the political and minority voter protection issues have always been intertwined.

*6 ARGUMENT

I.

Districts In Which Voters Of A Particular Minority Group Do Not Constitute 50% Of The Relevant Population, But Who Are Able To Elect Candidates Of Their Choice In Combination With Other Minority Voters, Or With Reliable Crossover Votes From The Population Majority, Meet The First Gingles Precondition For A Viable Section 2 Claim

Jackson Appellants (plaintiffs below) urge the Court to extend the protections of Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act to districts in which a substantially large group of minority voters - while short of comprising a mathematical majority of the population - is nonetheless capable of nominating and electing its candidate of choice. Before the District Court, other plaintiffs requested recognition of a § 2 claim not only for so-called “coalition” or “crossover districts,” but also for “influence districts,” where minority voters, while unable to elect their candidates of choice, exercise varying levels of influence in the electoral process.<sup>2</sup> *7 Session v. Perry, 298 F. Supp. 2d 451, 482-83 (E.D. Tex. 2004).<sup>3</sup>

League of Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006 WL 77695 (2006)

---

The District Court, following the Fifth Circuit's strict "fifty percent rule," rejected these arguments. Id. at 482-83 & nn. 111, 112 (citing Perez v. Pasadena Independent Sch. Dist., 165 F.3d 368 (5th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1114 (2000); Valdespino v. Alamo Heights Ind. Sch. Dist., 168 F.3d 848 (5th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1114 (2000)). In so doing, it declined the opportunity to decide whether any set of circumstances might exist in which a group of minority voters less than an absolute majority of the relevant population could ever satisfy the first Gingles precondition. Id. at 476.

This Court has yet to rule on the question. See, e.g., Johnson v. DeGrandy, 478 U.S. at 1008-09; Voinovich v. Quilter, 507 U.S. 146, 154 (1993); Grove v. Emison, 507 U.S. 25, 41 (1993); Gingles, 478 U.S. at 47 n.12; see also Metts v. Murphy, 363 F.3d 8, 11 (1st Cir. 2004) (en banc) ("[S]everal Supreme Court opinions after Gingles have offered the prospect, or at least clearly reserved the possibility, that Gingles' first precondition - that a racial minority must be *8 able to constitute a 'majority' in a single-member district - could extend to a group that was a numerical minority but had predictable cross-over support from other groups.") (citing cases).

LDF writes separately as an amicus to urge the Court to interpret the first Gingles requirement, consistent with the text and purpose of the Voting Rights Act, to include those districts in which a minority group can demonstrate an "ability to elect" - even if it does not comprise a mathematical majority of the population. Such a limited extension of the first Gingles precondition would demonstrate a recognition of the political realities of the American electoral process and is fully consistent with the evolution of the Court's Section 2 jurisprudence. The Court should not, however, extend coverage of Section 2 to include claims in which a minority group alleges that it can exercise some amorphous degree of "influence" over elections or governance, as doing so would establish a new standard that is both unworkable and ungrounded in either the statute or the relevant case law.

A. Recognizing "Crossover" or "Coalition" Districts under Section 2 Is Consistent with the Statutory Language, Structure and Intent, and also with This Court's Voting Rights Act Jurisprudence.

Because the language of Section 2 explicitly protects the ability of minority voters to "elect representatives of their choice," 42 U.S.C. § 1973(b) (emphasis added), the focus of the Section 2 inquiry at the precondition stage should be whether the specific conditions in a jurisdiction permit the fact-finder to conclude that a minority group in a given district does in fact have a reliable opportunity to elect its candidates of choice. See Gingles, 478 U.S. at 43-46 (describing legislative history and purpose of the Act). The pertinent difference *9 between "coalition" or "crossover districts," on the one hand, and "influence districts," on the other, is that the former districts involve instances in which there is a cognizable "ability to elect" claim.

The Court should not interpret the Gingles preconditions so strictly as to frustrate this clear statutory purpose. The Gingles test was fashioned in order to make sure that a cognizable Section 2 claim (and remedy) exists, especially given that the statute expressly disavows any guarantee of proportional representation. Gingles, 478 U.S. at 50 & n.17 (purpose of first precondition designed so that Section 2 would "only protect racial minority votes from diminution proximately caused by the districting plan; it would not assure racial minorities proportional representation.") (emphasis in original) (internal citations omitted). Thus, Gingles viewed the first precondition as a means to ensure that courts would consider Section 2 claims in jurisdictions where "minority voters possess the potential to elect representatives in the absence of the challenged structure or practice," 478 U.S. at 50 (emphasis in original), and the precondition should be understood to serve a functional - not inflexible - purpose. Grove, 507 U.S. at 40 ("[T]he 'geographically compact majority' and 'minority political cohesion' showings are needed to establish that the minority has the potential to elect a representative of its own choice in some single-member district.")

League of Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006 WL 77695 (2006)

---

Nor is there a practical reason to limit the protections of Section 2 to majority-minority communities. There is nothing talismanic about a district with a (single or combined) minority population greater than fifty percent. Both the Gingles preconditions and Section 2 itself were designed to provide practical measures for realizing the ability of minority voters to *10 elect candidates of choice.<sup>4</sup> The degree of racial polarization will drive what level of minority population is necessary and the analysis can vary even within a single state, or jurisdiction.

The Gingles Court itself recognized that some white crossover voting may exist and should be considered in the fact-intensive analysis of whether a Section 2 claim could be established. 478 U.S. at 56 (“And, in general, a white bloc vote that normally will defeat the combined strength of minority support plus white ‘crossover’ votes rises to the level of legally significant white bloc voting.... The amount of white bloc voting that can generally ‘minimize or cancel’ ... black voters' ability to elect representatives of their choice, however, will vary from district to district according to a number of factors.”) (emphasis added) (internal citations omitted).

Similarly, several lower courts - including the Fifth Circuit - have expressly recognized that minority coalitions among groups that each may not meet the first Gingles prerequisite can be considered together to satisfy its requirement, at least if they can establish that voters of both *11 groups vote together cohesively. See, e.g., Campos v. City of Baytown, Texas, 840 F.2d 1240, 1244-46 (5th Cir. 1988) (affirming trial court finding of cohesion and applying principle), cert. denied, 492 U.S. 905 (1989); League of United Latin American Citizens v. Midland Ind. Sch. Dist., 812 F.2d 1494, 1500-02 (5th Cir.) (same), vacated and aff'd on other grounds, 829 F.2d 546 (5th Cir. 1987); see also Concerned Citizens v. Hardee County Bd., 906 F.2d 524, 526-27 (11th Cir. 1990) (recognizing principle but affirming trial court's determination that cohesion between groups not proved); Brewer v. Ham, 876 F.2d 448, 453 (5th Cir. 1989) (same).

This Court has not decided the question. However, in Ga. v. Ashcroft, all of the Justices recognized the relevance of coalition and crossover districts in assessing whether retrogression under Section 5 occurred in districts where minority voters were provided an opportunity to elect their candidates of choice under the benchmark plan. See 539 U.S. at 480 (“[A] State may choose to create a greater number of districts in which it is likely - although perhaps not quite as likely as under the benchmark plan - that minority voters will be able to elect candidates of their choice.”); id. at 492 (Souter, J., dissenting) (“The prudential objective of § 5 is hardly betrayed if a State can show that a new districting plan shifts from supermajority districts, in which minorities can elect their candidates of choice by their own voting power, to coalition districts, in which minorities are in fact shown to have a similar opportunity when joined by predictably supportive nonminority voters.”) (emphasis added).

Although pervasive racially polarized voting patterns continue to dominate the political landscape, see, e.g., Pamela S. Karlan, Loss and Redemption: Voting Rights at the Turn of a Century, 50 Vand. L. Rev. 291 (1997); Samuel Issacharoff, *12 Polarized Voting and the Political Process: The Transformation of Voting Rights Jurisprudence, 90 Mich. L. Rev. 1833 (1992), there are (and have long been) some communities in which minority-preferred candidates enjoy limited, reliable white crossover support or in which minority voters have formed sufficiently large and dependably cohesive coalitions with other racial or ethnic minorities to elect a candidate of their choice. See, e.g., Bernard Grofman, Lisa Handley, & David Lublin, Drawing Effective Minority Districts: A Conceptual Framework and Some Empirical Evidence, 79 N.C.L. Rev. 1383, 1394-1423 (2001) (empirical analyses of election results in certain communities where black voters were able to elect candidates of choice despite not comprising a majority of the districts' respective populations).

In its rulings since Gingles, the Court has recognized the phenomenon that there are some communities in which coalitions are formed among minority groups or small, reliable levels of crossover voting from white voters that provide certain minorities, who themselves may not comprise a majority of the voting population, with a reasonable opportunity to elect their candidates of choice. See, e.g., Ga. v. Ashcroft, 539 U.S. at 480; DeGrandy, 512 U.S. at 1023.<sup>5</sup>

*13 To be sure, it will continue to be true that for most Section 2 claims, having a majority of minority voters will be necessary to demonstrate an “ability to elect.” But, the existence of crossover and coalition districts where the opportunity to elect candidates of choice is available to minority voters should be embraced and protected by the Court’s Section 2 jurisprudence, not held in check based on an unnecessarily restrictive interpretation of its judicially-crafted test. DeGrandy, 512 U.S. at 1020 (describing the Voting Rights Act as “a statute meant to hasten the waning of racism in American politics”). Requiring minority voters to show that they are an absolute majority ignores the practical reality that, in some jurisdictions, they are capable of electing preferred candidates without such numbers. It also places an artificial limitation on the effectiveness of Section 2 by failing to allow it to account for shifts in the political landscape. See Voinovich, 507 U.S. at 158 (“[T]he Gingles factors cannot be applied mechanically without regard to the nature of the claim.”).

Indeed, in DeGrandy, this Court expressly rejected the State’s safe harbor argument on the grounds that relying too heavily on majority-minority districts as the only way in which minorities may enjoy equal electoral opportunity would “obscure the fact that there are communities in which minority citizens are able to form coalitions with voters from other racial and ethnic groups, having no need to be a majority within a single district in order to elect candidates of their choice.” 512 U.S. at 1020.

*14 B. Section 2 Claims Involving “Coalition” or “Crossover” Districts Are Governed by Manageable Standards Already Familiar to Federal Courts from Past Section 2 Litigation.

Relaxing the first Gingles precondition of the Section 2 inquiry to permit a more exacting focus on minority voters’ “ability to elect” in a coalition or crossover district only brings it closer in line with the text of the statute, which codified the “totality of the circumstances” analysis from White v. Regester, 412 U.S. 755 (1973), and the intent of Congress, which was to take account of the contemporary, practical realities of the political process. See Gingles, 478 U.S. at 45 (noting that the Senate Committee recognized that “the question whether the political processes are ‘equally open’ depends on a searching practical evaluation of the ‘past and present reality,’ ... and on a ‘functional’ view of the political process.”) (some internal quotations and citations omitted). See also Ga. v. Ashcroft, 539 U.S. at 480 (“The ability of minority voters to elect a candidate of their choice is important but often complex in practice to determine.”).

This more practical application of the first Gingles precondition recognizing districts that may not have a numerical majority of minority voters would not open the door to claims that Congress never intended to protect in Section 2, since proof of the other two Gingles preconditions would remain necessary. See Ga. v. Ashcroft, 539 U.S. at 485 (“And it is of course true that evidence of racial polarization is one of many factors relevant in assessing whether a minority group is able to elect a candidate of choice or to exert a significant influence in a particular district.”). The other two Gingles prongs, along with other “totality of the circumstances” considerations, will assist courts in determining if a given *15 district provides minority voters with an “ability to elect” as opposed to merely the “ability to influence.”<sup>6</sup>

Indeed, the determination of an “ability to elect” in coalition or crossover districts is one that even the dissenting Justices in Ga. v. Ashcroft acknowledge is concrete and demonstrable, 539 U.S. at 492 (Souter, J., dissenting), not an abstract hope too elusive to for courts to establish limiting principles, as is the case with the recognition of influence districts. Id. at 496-97 (but noting difficulties of quantifying “influence”).

While it is true that the Court’s recent decision in Ga. v. Ashcroft held that influence districts could be considered in a § 5 retrogression analysis, the recognition of influence districts in that context should not extend to Section 2. Ga. v. Ashcroft, 539 U.S. at 478 (“We have, however, ‘consistently understood’ § 2 to “combat different evils and, accordingly, to impose very different duties upon the States.”) (quoting Reno v. Bossier Parish Sch. Bd., 520 U.S. 471, 477 (1997)). See also Holder v. Hall, 512 U.S. 874, 883 (1994) (plurality opinion) (Sections 2 and 5 are “different in structure, purpose, and application”). Indeed, as the Court in Ga. v. Ashcroft noted, “[i]n contrast to § 5’s retrogression standard, the ‘essence’ of a § 2 vote dilution claim is that ‘a certain electoral law, practice, or structure ... *16 cause[s] an inequality in the opportunities enjoyed by black [or other minority voters] and white voters to elect their preferred representatives.’” Id. (quoting Gingles, 478 U.S. at 47) (emphasis added).

League of Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006 WL 77695 (2006)

---

Just as the text of Section 2 provides the basis for a more flexible interpretation of the first Gingles precondition, therefore, it also provides a built-in limiting principle: the requirement that minorities in an existing or proposed district demonstrate an ability to elect “representatives of their choice.” 42 U.S.C. § 1973(b). Whereas the parameters of a Section 5 retrogression determination find their origins in this Court’s jurisprudence, see Beer v. United States, 423 U.S. 130, 141 (1976), the statutory language about the minority group’s “ability to elect” is the touchstone of any Section 2 analysis.

The court below erred in ending its Section 2 analysis when it found that African-American voters in District 24 were unable to meet the majority-minority requirement of the first Gingles precondition. Sessions, 298 F. Supp. 2d at 483 (“A minority group lacking a majority cannot elect its candidate of choice, and denying the group a separate district cannot be a denial of any opportunity protected by the [Voting Rights] Act.”). Its singular focus on the numerical aspect of the Gingles test was unwarranted and turned its attention away from the relevant “ability to elect” question.

This Court should clarify its ruling in Gingles, remand the case to the District Court to determine, under the totality of the circumstances, whether District 24 provides minority voters an opportunity to elect their candidate of choice. Among other circumstances, the lower court should seek to determine the degree of racial polarized voting with special focus given to whether the district provides the minority voters with the opportunity to elect candidates of choice.

*17 II.

Whatever Limitations, If Any, The Court Places Upon Political Gerrymanders, It Is Essential That They, Like Other Redistrictings, Remain Subject To Meaningful Scrutiny Under Section 2

In the last two decades, developments in computer technology and software programming have made possible increasingly sophisticated and precise shaping of districts for political, among other, ends, and this Court’s attention has been correspondingly drawn to the question whether the Constitution places any limits upon partisan gerrymandering. These appeals grow out of cases filed to challenge one such redistricting.

Some plaintiffs in those cases alleged that the 2003 districting plan at issue, even if it were drawn for partisan ends, also infringed upon minority voting rights protections afforded by Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act. The court below rejected those claims on the ground, inter alia, that their proponents could not satisfy the first Gingles precondition. See supra § I. However, the court also indicated in its decision that even were this not its view, it would have rejected the claims by applying a doctrine developed by the Fifth Circuit more than a dozen years ago, which holds that neither the second nor the third Gingles preconditions (cohesion and racially polarized voting) can be established where party affiliation is also characterized by substantial racial differences. Session, 298 F. Supp. 2d at 478 n.88.

Such an approach would effectively eliminate the application of Section 2 to redistricting plans in areas where political party loyalties have split along racial or ethnic lines, which has become common in our nation at this point in its *18 history. That result is insupportable as a matter of the statutory text or Congressional purposes underlying enactment and amendment of Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act. It would be especially unfortunate if this Court were to sanction it, directly or implicitly. Rather, the Court should make clear in its decision on these appeals that the Fifth Circuit's approach is inconsistent with the Act.

A. The Doctrine that Racial Cleavages in Political Party Affiliation Negate the Significance Under Section 2 of Racial Voting Patterns Misconstrues this Court's Section 2 Jurisprudence.

For twenty years, racially polarized voting patterns have been at the core of this Court's Voting Rights Act jurisprudence. See, e.g., Gingles, 478 U.S. 30. The analysis of racially polarized voting is a very apt analytical tool because it aids in identifying the circumstances in which private behavior combines with structural electoral arrangements to impede equal opportunities for minorities to elect candidates of choice and participate in the political process. See id. at 51. Under Section 2, two of the three Gingles preconditions involve variants of bloc voting. The standard is in many respects self-regulating. If a substantial degree of polarization is present, assuming other threshold conditions are met, the analysis proceeds, whereas a failure to show legally significant polarization ends the inquiry.

Since this Court decided Gingles, the preconditions have played an essential gate-keeping function for courts by allowing them to approach Section 2 claims with a discernible standard. As the designation suggests, meeting the preconditions does not suffice for purposes of the ultimate liability determination under Section 2 - that determination is made only under the totality of the circumstances, including consideration of the *19 "Senate factors." Id. at 36-37. Accordingly, in the area of minority voting rights protection, Congress has identified a problem, provided a remedy, and this Court has supplied, and at times refined, a judicially manageable standard.

Racially polarized voting patterns are the touchstone of Section 2 claims. In Gingles, the Court addressed the question whether the Section 2 dilution inquiry concerns itself exclusively with the existence of polarized voting patterns or also with the reasons that such patterns occurred. Writing for the Court, Justice Brennan explained that:

It is the difference between the choices made between blacks and whites - not the reasons for that difference - that results in blacks having less opportunity than whites to elect preferred representatives. Consequently, we conclude that under the "results test" of Section 2, only the correlation between the race of the voter and selection of certain candidates, not the causes of the correlation matters.

Id. at 64 (emphasis in original).

All Justices accepted the principle announced by this portion of Justice Brennan's plurality opinion, at least insofar as it applied to the preconditions to bringing a Section 2 claim. See Gingles, 478 U.S. at 100 (O'Connor, J., joined by Burger, C.J., Powell and Rehnquist, JJ., concurring in the judgment):

Insofar as statistical evidence of divergent racial voting patterns is admitted solely to establish that the minority group is politically cohesive and to assess its prospects for electoral success, I agree that defendants cannot rebut this showing by offering evidence that the divergent racial voting patterns may be explained in part by causes other *20 than race, such as the underlying divergence in the interests of minority and white voters. I do not agree, however, that such evidence can never affect the overall vote dilution inquiry.

League of Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006 WL 77695 (2006)

---

(Justice White did not join this part of Justice Brennan's opinion only insofar as it would not have permitted consideration of the race of the candidate, as well as the race of the voter, in the “totality of the circumstances” analysis. Gingles, 478 U.S. at 83.)

Notwithstanding this functional agreement that the Gingles preconditions do not end the dilution analysis but rather operate to narrow the number of cases that require further Section 2 consideration under the totality of the circumstances, the Fifth Circuit has adopted an inconsistent rule which permits the very type of “rebuttal evidence” disfavored by the Court. See League of Latin American Citizens v. Clements, 999 F.2d 831, 850, 858-59 (5th Cir. 1993) (en banc) (LULAC), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1071 (1994). Although the LULAC court insisted on an evaluation of the role of partisan causation as an explanation for polarized voting patterns with all of the attendant problems of that approach, see, e.g., Bernard Grofman & Lisa Handley, Issues in Voting Rights, 65 Miss. L.J. 205, 222-34 (1995); Pamela S. Karlan & Daryl J. Levinson, Why Voting is Different, 84 Cal. L. Rev. 1201, 1223-27 (1996), it did not clearly explain how its newly announced rule of Section 2 analysis would operate. LULAC, 999 F.2d at 860 (“...we need not resolve the debate today. Whether or not the burden of the plaintiffs to prove bloc voting includes the burden to explain [that is, to negate the role of] partisan influence, the result is the same.”)

The LULAC rule has both doctrinal and evidentiary shortcomings. As a legal matter, it introduces partisan *21 intent/causation into the proof requirements of a statute that was expressly amended by Congress to establish a results test in order to make proof of intent unnecessary. See Gingles, 478 U.S. at 35-37 (summarizing history). As an evidentiary and empirical matter the problem is two-fold:

First, there is sufficient correlation between partisanship and racial bloc voting patterns in so many parts of the country that the two are at best complicated, or in some cases impossible to disentangle. See, e.g., Grofman & Handley, 65 Miss. L.J. at 229 (“... separating out racial from partisan concerns will not be easy, and forcing plaintiffs to try to do so in order to succeed in proving a Section 2 violation in situations involving partisan elections will make it much harder for plaintiffs to prevail in such challenges, even in situations where minority exclusion [is] total”); Karlan & Levinson, 84 Cal. L. Rev. at 1223-24 (noting shortcomings of statistical models that attempt to disaggregate race and partisanship); Richard L. Engstrom, The Reincarnation of the Intent Standard: Federal Judges and At-Large Election Cases, 28 How. L.J. 495, 506 (1985) (criticizing attempts by courts to “cleanse” racially divided voting patterns of their racial content through multivariate analysis); cf. Vieth v. Jubelirer, 541 U.S. at 287 (Scalia, J.) (“But a person's politics is rarely as readily discernible - and never as permanently discernible as a person's race. Political affiliation is not an immutable characteristic, but may shift from one election to the next; and even within a given election, not all voters follow the party line.”).

Second, the introduction of partisan causation in the initial precondition stage of the Gingles analysis transforms a judicially manageable standard for political fairness to minority voters into a judicially created barrier to the congressionally authorized method of relief.

*22 In a footnote, the court below appears to extend the Fifth Circuit's polarized voting causation rule. Session, 298 F. Supp. 2d at 478 n.88. Contrary to Gingles and its progeny, the court announces that its newly devised test requires that at the Gingles preconditions stage, plaintiffs bear the burden of disproving what amounts to a presumption of partisan causation. Id.<sup>7</sup> Placing this affirmative burden on plaintiffs at the threshold stage transforms partisanship from one factor among others to be taken into account in the “totality of the circumstances” analysis into an outcome-determinative issue, despite the facts that: (a) it is not mentioned in the statute; and, (b) all members of the Court in Gingles accepted the proposition that the issue was relevant only at the final “totality” stage of the case, except for three Justices who would have excluded its consideration even at that stage.

The Fifth Circuit's particularly muscular version of partisan polarization presumption is also anomalous among lower federal courts. Although several Circuits recognize that it is proper to consider explanations for voting patterns under *23 the totality of the circumstances, consistent with Justice O'Connor's opinion in Gingles, the Fifth Circuit appears to stand alone in its requirement that partisan causation be presumed to explain racially polarized in voting patterns. See e.g., United States v. Charleston County, 365 F.3d 341, 348-49 (4th Cir. 2004); Goosby v. Town Bd. of Hempstead, 180 F.3d 476, 493 (2d Cir. 1999); Uno v. City of Holyoke, 72 F.3d 973, 983 (1st Cir. 1995).

B. The Fifth Circuit's Partisanship Exception to the Second and Third Gingles Preconditions Ignores the Extent to which Race Has Become Implicated in Partisan Alignment.

Apart from the doctrinal and evidentiary problems with the Session variant of the partisan polarization presumption in the Section 2 analysis, the rule ignores the extent to which today's political parties have been shaped by express or implicit racial considerations and appeals. Faced with an entrenched and well-documented history of discrimination in voting with discernible present day effects, Congress has determined on several occasions that the best way to enhance minority political inclusion is to take account of and try to ameliorate racial cleavages rather than seeking to explain them away.

The contemporary party alignments happened over time, but they cannot be said to be sufficiently different in nature from the trend that began prior to the passage of the Voting Rights Act to justify a prophylactic rule that places them beyond the reach of courts. See Grofman & Handley, 65 Miss. L.J. at 229 (explaining that Blacks have been overwhelmingly Democratic in their party affiliation since 1964, and whites have become increasingly Republican).<sup>8</sup> The contemporary *24 partisan trends emerged in a context that scholars and political operatives both recognize. See Karlan & Levinson, 84 Cal. L. Rev. at 1223 (citing Thomas B. Edsall & Mary D. Edsall, Chain Reaction: The Impact of Race Rights, and Taxes on American Politics, at 151 (1991) (arguing that racial attitudes after the 1960s “became a central characteristic of both ideology and party identification, integral to voters' choices between Democrats and Republicans”).

Indeed, even political partisans, at times, express a willingness to acknowledge the role that race has played in the prevailing political alignment. As the Washington Post recently reported, in a prepared speech delivered to the NAACP during its national conference in July of 2005, Republican National Committee Chairman, Ken Mehlman, apologized for “the southern strategy,” which the paper described as “Republican efforts to use race as a wedge issue on matters such as desegregation and busing - to appeal to white southern voters.” Mike Allen, RNC Chief to Say It Was ‘Wrong’ to Exploit Racial Conflict for Votes, Washington Post, July 14 2005, at A4. “By the #70s and into the 80s and *25 90s, the Democratic Party solidified its gains in the African American community, and we Republicans did not effectively reach out .... Some Republicans gave up on winning the African American vote, looking the other way or trying to benefit politically from racial polarization. I am here today as the Republican Chairman to tell you we were wrong.” Id.

Nor is the history of the Democratic Party without substantial racial strife. See Mary Frances Berry & John W. Blassingame, Long Memory; the Black Experience in America 385 (1982) (detailing the exclusion of the integrated Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party from the party's national convention in 1964); Paul Frymer, Uneasy Alliances; Race and Party Competition in America 3-7 (1999) (detailing the neglect of African-American interests by the modern Democratic party). Indeed, Frymer observes more broadly that “[a]t most moments in American history, the desire of political parties to seek national office has meant marginalization for African Americans .... We are ... one of few democratic nations where party leaders have an incentive to appeal almost exclusively to the majority group.” Id. at 6.

League of Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006 WL 77695 (2006)

---

In light of this history, whether desirable or not, it seems particularly incongruous for a court to begin its analysis of a congressionally mandated minority voting protection and political fairness measure with the presumption that racial patterns of partisan affiliation negate the significance of persistent racial polarization at the ballot box. A rule whose expansion has the potential to allow political parties to “benefit politically from racial polarization” rather than ameliorating it is unwarranted.

*26 C. Whether or Not It Holds that There Are Constitutional Limits to Partisan Gerrymandering in the Redistricting Process, the Court Should Explicitly Disapprove the Fifth Circuit's Unique Partisanship Exception to Section 2.

For the reasons we have described above, politics in the United States is now substantially intertwined with race and ethnicity, and correspondingly, partisan gerrymandering may dramatically impact minority voting strength, as the highly partisan redistricting plan at issue in these appeals demonstrates. With support from Members of both major political parties, Congress has exercised its constitutional authority to place minority voting rights above partisan political interests through the passage and renewal of the Voting Rights Act.<sup>9</sup>

If this court allows the continued application of a rule that racial or ethnic polarization in partisan alignment negates the existence of the Gingles preconditions of cohesive minority voting and racially polarized voting, it will place minority voters beyond the reach of Section 2 protections. This result is contrary to the language and purposes of the Voting Rights Act and this Court should expressly disapprove it in these appeals, whether or not it fashions limitations on partisan gerrymanders.

The need for the Court explicitly to address the LULAC rule is especially critical if the result of its renewed deliberations on partisan gerrymandering places no substantial limitations upon that device, as party organizations can be *27 expected to maximize political advantage in this fashion to the greatest extent allowable by the law.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, amicus curiae respectfully suggests that the judgment below should be vacated and the case remanded for reconsideration in light of the clarified Gingles standards urged in this brief.

Footnotes

FN

* Counsel of Record

- 1 Letters of consent to the filing of this brief have been lodged with the Clerk of this Court. No counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no person or entity, other than amici, made any monetary contribution to its preparation.
- 2 There has been some confusion among commentators litigants, and courts - including the District Court below, see, e.g., Session, 298 F. Supp. 2d at 482-83 (identifying various proffered examples of influence and coalition districts) - over what constitutes an “influence,” “coalition,” or “crossover” district. For purposes of this brief, we consider an “influence district” one “where minority voters may not be able to elect a candidate of choice but can play a substantial, if not decisive, role in the electoral process.” Ga. v. Ashcroft, 539 U.S. 461, 482 (2003). A “coalitional” or “crossover district” is one in which (as the Court has described it), minority voters in a district - despite their not constituting a majority of the population - can form a coalition with another minority group sufficient to elect their candidate of choice, Johnson v. DeGrandy, 512 U.S. 997, 1020 (1994), or can demonstrate an ability to elect their candidate of choice “when joined by predictably supportive nonminority voters.” Ga. v. Ashcroft, 539 U.S. at 492 (Souter, J., dissenting) (emphasis added).

League of Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006 WL 77695 (2006)

---

- 3 This was the lower court's opinion supporting the judgment that was vacated and remanded in Jackson v. Perry, 160 L. Ed. 2d 252 (2004); the issues addressed by amicus in this brief were discussed by the court only in that opinion, and not in its June 9, 2005 remand opinion (reprinted at J.S. App. 1a-50a in No. 05-204).
- 4 Indeed, in the early years of Section 2 enforcement, courts routinely required supermajorities to guarantee the minority voters' ability to elect. See, e.g., Ketchum v. Byrne, 740 F.2d 1398, 1413-17 (7th Cir. 1984) (collecting cases). Just as it is possible that minority voters who constitute a bare majority of the population a district may fail to demonstrate that they have the ability to elect candidates of their choice, it is also theoretically possible that minority voters who are less than a majority of a district can make such a showing. See Gingles, 478 U.S. at 56 n.24 and accompanying text. Courts should be free to continue to take into account the changing landscape of American politics and the development of minority coalitions or the phenomenon of limited white crossover voting where it exists.
- 5 It bears emphasis that whether a court will find reliable, predictable majority crossover voting of sufficient size to allow the election of minority voters' candidates of choice will depend on the nature and extent of the proof offered by Section 2 claimants. The inquiry is similar in nature to that described by Justice Brennan in Gingles with respect to determining whether white bloc voting would "generally 'minimize or cancel,' ... black voters' ability to elect representatives of their choice," and "will vary from district to district according to a number of factors." See Gingles, 478 U.S. at 56, text at n.24 (setting out non-exclusive list of potentially relevant factors).
- 6 For example, a minority group could require so many crossover votes that it does not truly possess the capacity to choose its own candidate, but only to influence electoral contests between two or more white-preferred candidates. Similarly, a minority group that is too small and that thus requires too high a level of white crossover support will be unlikely to satisfy the third Gingles precondition: that white regularly vote as a bloc against the minority preferred candidate. A careful analysis of election data, therefore, will shed light on which role minority voters actually play in the political process.
- 7 Cf. Johnson v. Cal., 162 L. Ed. 2d 129, 139 (2005) ("[A] defendant satisfies the requirements of Batson's first step by producing evidence sufficient to permit the trial judge to draw an inference that discrimination has occurred. Respondent, however, ... contends [that] a Batson claim must prove the ultimate facts by a preponderance of the evidence in the prima facie case .... Respondent's argument is misguided.... 'It is not until the third step that the persuasiveness of the justification becomes relevant - the step in which the trial court determines whether the opponent of the strike has carried his burden of proving purposeful discrimination.' Purkett [v. Elem], 514 U.S. 765] at 768.") Since Section 2 was amended in 1982 to eliminate any requirement of proving intent, placing the burden on plaintiffs to disprove a presumed nondiscriminatory explanation for racially polarized voting patterns is even more insupportable.
- 8 In Gingles, 478 U.S. at 40, this Court acknowledged the record evidence of the use of race to divide the electorate for nearly a century, continuing beyond the date of the last Voting Rights Act renewal:
[T]he [district] court found that white candidates in North Carolina have encouraged voting along color lines by appealing to racial prejudice. It noted that the record is replete with specific examples of racial appeals, ranging in style from overt and blatant to subtle and furtive, and in date from the 1890's to the 1984 campaign for a seat in the United States Senate. The court determined that the use of racial appeals in political campaigns in North Carolina persists to the present day and that its current effect is to lessen to some degree the opportunity of black citizens to participate effectively in the political processes and to elect candidates of their choice.
- 9 Cf. Vieth, 541 U.S. at 275 (discussing Congress' authority over Congressional districting pursuant to Art. I, Sec. 4 of the Constitution and noting the failure to exercise that authority in recent history to limit partisan gerrymandering).